What does Co-Signing really mean?

A co-signer is a person who guarantees the debt of another individual. Both are equally responsible for the debt and must pay if borrower does not make payments. Co-signing on a loan does not mean partial ownership of the property. Credit scores can also be lowered if the primary borrower does not pay.

21% of U.S. adults have co-signed a loan or another credit product to help out a loved one.

18% of those who co-signed a loan for a loved one reported losing money. Meanwhile, 20% reported damages to their credit score.

PHISHING ALERT

SPAM.SCAM.MALWARE.SPYWARE

- ~ This specific scam involves fake websites but remember that cybercriminals will exploit this event in different ways.
- ~ Don't download any files or attachments from websites or emails. Any troubleshooting related to the CrowdStrike outage should be addressed by your organization's IT team.
- ~ Be cautious of unexpected calls, emails, or text messages that seem urgent to respond to. Cybercriminals will try to trick you into acting impulsively.
- ~ Major companies don't usually give things away for free. Be very cautious of any unsolicited emails that offer something at no cost.

This scam begins when you receive what appears to be an urgent email that contains an attachment. If you try to open the attachment, an error will display that says, "Failed to connect to the 'OneDrive' cloud service, to fix the error you need to update the DNS cache manually." The message also provides a few lines of code and instructions on how to copy and paste it into a Windows PowerShell Terminal. The message urges you to take action, which is exactly what scammers want. If you follow their instructions, you will run a malicious command on your machine. The code will install malware, giving the scammers access to your personal data!
